Executive Summary

In observance of Asian American and Pacific Islander (AAPI) Heritage Month, Hello Alice set out to better understand the more than 17,000 AAPI small business owners on our platform. As the largest community of underrepresented entrepreneurs in the United States, we collect a wealth of anonymous user data and survey responses from our growing body of grant applications. In partnership with the Global Entrepreneurship Network, Southeast Asia Resource Action Center (SEARAC), Welcome to Chinatown, and ACE NextGen, we are able to harness this data for a comprehensive look at who AAPI small businesses are and what challenges they face.

This report appears at an unprecedented time for AAPI entrepreneurs. The COVID-19 pandemic has compounded existing problems for these small businesses, and AAPI owners tell us that their number one challenge continues to be access to capital. In addition, the recent wave of anti-Asian hate incidents has heavily impacted these owners’ ability to operate their businesses.

We’re happy to report that there are reasons for celebration, too. Our data measures the tremendous contributions AAPI small businesses make to their communities. Not only do they create valuable jobs, but AAPI owners on Hello Alice are committed to making a positive impact through their businesses, including by hiring staff from diverse backgrounds, paying living wages, and donating to nonprofits.

Throughout this report, you will hear the stories of individual AAPI entrepreneurs and encounter data that reveals the context in which they operate. We hope this document becomes a rallying point for organizations and individuals working to support AAPI entrepreneurs this month and every month.
COVID-19 Impacts

Every small business owner has felt the crunch of the COVID-19 pandemic in one way or another, but there are unique and acute challenges facing the 1.9 million small businesses owned by Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders. A recent report from the New York Federal Reserve and AARP found that 90% of small Asian American firms lost revenue in 2020, and a separate survey from our partners at the Asian Pacific Islander American Chamber of Commerce & Entrepreneurship (National ACE) reports that only 19% of AAPI businesses were fully open and operating normally as of December 2020. The number of AAPI business owners is estimated to have decreased by more than a quarter since the pandemic began.

Some of this decline can be explained by structural problems that have plagued other groups of New Majority entrepreneurs. Hello Alice data shows that AAPI small business owners are more likely to operate in the sectors most affected by pandemic public health orders, and language barriers and lack of banking relationships have limited their access to vital relief programs such as the Paycheck Protection Program.

In addition, we cannot ignore the impact of anti-Asian violence on the rise across the country. A recent report recorded 3,795 hate incidents targeting AAPI individuals since March 2020, with small businesses listed as the primary site for discrimination. Nearly three in five U.S. Asian adults say that these events have impacted their mental health. As John C. Yang, the executive director of the nonprofit Asian Americans Advancing Justice, told reporters, “Asian-American businesses are dealing with two viruses.”

A better understanding of these contributing factors will allow us to pursue effective, long-term solutions. We can already look forward to new rounds of federal aid, including the Restaurant Revitalization Fund that provides grants for food and beverage businesses — the number one sector for AAPI small business owners, according to Hello Alice data. But our research also shows that the average AAPI business generates modest revenues and ranks access to capital as its number one challenge.Exploring ways to revitalize and sustain AAPI business owners into the future will ensure their continued success and ongoing contributions to both their local communities and our larger economy.

When we asked AAPI small business owners about their greatest business challenges, the most common responses were raising capital and operating my business.

Asked specifically about how the COVID-19 pandemic has impacted their business, AAPI owners cited reduced sales and employee anxiety or distraction.

These responses suggest that the pandemic intensified existing challenges faced by AAPI owners. Finding solutions for capital access and putting an end to anti-Asian hate will go a long way toward solving many of the short- and long-term problems limiting AAPI business growth.

May is a unique time for us to celebrate one of the fastest-growing demographics in the United States. The Asian American Pacific Islander (AAPI) community is also one of the most diverse in language, ethnicity, and culture. AAPIs own 6.2 percent of all small businesses in the U.S., accounting for nearly 2 million businesses and employing over 3.5 million workers. Our businesses play an integral part in every industry and make important contributions to our local neighborhoods. Additionally, the next generation is poised to be even more entrepreneurial, with AAPIs having the highest rate of millennial entrepreneurship compared to the general population.

Despite this progress, AAPI small business owners still face headwinds. AAPI businesses, particularly those in large cities, were impacted by the pandemic long before the lockdowns began, as early as January 2020. Even during normal circumstances, access to capital was a major barrier. Asian American, Native Hawaiian, and Pacific Islander entrepreneurs have been shown to rely on personal and family savings as a source of startup capital and avoided seeking out additional financing due to fear of rejection. Other major barriers for small business owners include limited English proficiency and access to advice due to lack of affordable assistance.

To close this gap, ACE NextGen connects, elevates, and gives back to the AAPI entrepreneur community. We are the millennial branch of the nonprofit Asian Pacific Islander American Chamber of Commerce & Entrepreneurship (National ACE). Through our local chapters and national programming, we’ve helped AAPI-owned small businesses weather tough times and prepare to grow as we return to normal. As an entrepreneur-led organization, we know first-hand the importance of having the right knowledge, right network, and right resources in running a successful small business.

We are excited to work with Hello Alice and our other national and local partners to provide support, education, and community to help AAPI-owned businesses seize the opportunity of growth and fulfill the possibilities of entrepreneurship across the U.S. We believe the future is bright for small business and are proud to be a part of this journey.

Where We Go From Here

A recent survey from our partners at the Asian Pacific Islander American Chamber of Commerce & Entrepreneurship (National ACE) found that nearly two-thirds of AAPI small business owners are optimistic about the future. If we are able to connect AAPI entrepreneurs with the resources and support they need, we will help foster a post-COVID prosperity that resolves the social and economic disparities that have previously limited their growth.

This starts by taking advantage of existing resources. The same survey found that more than half of AAPI owners were not aware of government assistance programs, and roughly one-third assumed they did not qualify. Hello Alice is spreading awareness of these programs to its community with step-by-step guides to the latest federal stimulus programs, access to thousands of industry-specific resources, and a peer-to-peer community of more than 375,000 small business owners ready to help them succeed. We must ensure that AAPI owners claim every dollar of funding they deserve.

Similarly, we must all seize this moment as an opportunity to lift up AAPI small businesses everywhere. We need to speak, post, and share our love for these businesses. It’s our collective responsibility to report hate any hate incidents and spread awareness about the threats AAPI owners face.

Finally, to AAPI small business owners, we recommend the following actions for immediate relief:

- Join Our AAPI Town Hall

  In partnership with SEARAC, Welcome to Chinatown, and ACE NextGen, we are hosting a virtual AAPI Town Hall on Tuesday, May 25 at 1:30 p.m. ET as an open forum for the AAPI community to share their experiences and for allies to learn more about how they can be supportive.
